Victim, suspect rushed to hospital for surgery

'This never happens in Yaletown.' Locals in disbelief as they recount daylight shooting, chase and cornering at seawall

Paramedics perform first aid on victim Paul Dragan, also seen inset, after a shooting Tuesday morning outside a Starbucks in the 100 block of Davie Street. NIGEL HORSLEY/FOR METRO; INSET: KATE WEBB/METRO FILE

The owner of a popular Yaletown bike shop is fighting for his life after he was gunned down in broad daylight Tuesday, prompting police to chase a suspect along the seawall to Science World, where he was shot in a gunfight.

The 52-year-old victim was in stable but critical condition after undergoing surgery on Tuesday afternoon, while the suspect, 61, underwent surgery for serious injuries.

The suspect remains in hospital under police guard.

A plainclothes female police officer also sustained minor injuries from glass when a gunshot shattered a police car window.

At least 50 children were locked down inside Science World during the incident. Visitors were told to lie on the floor before children were quickly taken to watch a movie as police secured the scene.

The shooting unfolded around 11 a.m. when police responded to reports of gunfire outside a Starbucks on Davie Street near Marinaside Crescent. When officers arrived, they found a man had been shot.

Two employees, both visibly shaken, confirmed the victim was Paul Dragan, owner of Reckless the Bike Store, located across the street from the coffee shop.

"I can't talk too much. We're very sad," said employee Andrew, who would only give his first name.

Resident Adam Hunter, who lives nearby, was on his balcony when he heard what sounded like a gas explosion. He quickly realized it was gunfire when two more shots rang out.

"I had no idea. It's not like the movies," he said, wrapping his arms around his shoulders, trembling.

When he peered over the balcony, Hunter said he saw a man with a pistol beside a blue Ford Fusion sedan parked in front of the Starbucks.

"I saw a guy leaning across the roof of the car with a big, black handgun," said Hunter. "He took one shot while I was watching."

Towels and rags soaked in blood were piled on the sidewalk outside Starbucks. A few metres away, broken glass covered the walkway where bullets had shattered the lobby windows of a condo building.

Duke Stevenson, who also lives nearby, was walking toward the foot of Davie Street when he heard eight loud gunshots.

When he rounded the corner, he saw people ducking as the suspect, who he described as wearing a button-down shirt and dress pants, started running toward the seawall.

He then saw Dragan on the ground with "a big hole in his back" as paramedics performed CPR.

"I'm pretty stunned. This never happens in Yaletown," he said. "Everybody knows Paul. I see him every day."

As police pursued the suspect toward Science World, Amber Bouchard watched the standoff unfold from the base of the Main Street-Science World SkyTrain station.

"He was in a daze," she said of the suspect. "I would say maybe 20 cops formed a line, pushed him into a corner, and he started shooting at the cops, then the cops shot back."

She couldn't see the actual gunfight, which happened on the seawall behind Science World, but heard at least five shots before the suspect was taken away in an ambulance.

It was a harrowing experience for a small group of children who witnessed the shooting from inside Science World. They were taken to the police station and will be offered counselling if necessary, said Const. Brian Montague.

"The most important thing here is that nobody in Science World was injured," he said. "None of the kids, none of the staff, none of the adults."

As a police officer was involved in a shooting, the Independent Investigations Office was deployed to the scene.

Premier exempts herself from refinery decisions

Pacific Future Energy. Christy Clark's ex-husband Mark Marissen hired by company behind $10-billion proposal

MATT KIELTYKA
Metro in Vancouver

The premier will have no say in proposed oil refineries in the province after recusing herself from government decisions Tuesday.

Christy Clark made the decision, with the advice of the conflict commissioner, after her ex-husband Mark Marissen was named executive vice-president of communications at Pacific Future Energy Corporation, which has plans to build a $10-billion refinery near Prince Rupert.

"Out of an abundance of caution, I have decided to take action today to ensure there is no conflict, whether that is perceived or real," Clark said. "Anyone who has an ex-spouse knows that your ex has the right to manage their life and career as they see fit. I certainly have no business ties or financial ties with my ex-husband."

Not only will Clark exempt herself from any matters involving Pacific Future Energy Corporation, she will not take part in any government discussions or decisions on any proposed oil refineries in B.C.

"I have delegated that responsibility to the minister of finance, Mike de Jong," she said. "If any refinery project were to proceed there would be permits from the provincial government potentially, but approval would likely come from the federal government."

This isn't the first time Clark has had to shield herself from Marissen's business interests.

The Vancouver Observer reported in April that Clark was listed as a partner of Marissen's lobbying firm, Burrard Communications, in 2008.

Burrard Communications lobbied on behalf of Enbridge's Northern Gateway project in 2005 and 2006, causing Clark to issue a statement saying she only briefly joined the company on an unrelated project when Enbridge was no longer a client.

"I have, and I will always, strive to maintain the highest standard of integrity," Clark said Tuesday. "The public, and public life, demands public trust. I have always tried to be clear and upfront with the facts. That's what I'm doing today."

'World's greenest' refinery pitched to process oilsands crude on B.C. coast

A Vancouver company is pitching a $10-billion oilsands refinery on B.C.'s north coast that aims to connect Alberta's vast energy resources with Asian markets while avoiding some of the pitfalls others have encountered.

Pacific Future Energy Corporation says the refinery would be the "world's greenest" and built in full partnership with B.C. First Nations, many of whom are vehemently opposed to proposals to ship crude to the West Coast for export.

Any day now, Ottawa is expected to decide on one of those proposals: Enbridge Inc.'s controversial Northern Gateway pipeline. One of the biggest concerns with that project is the fact that huge tankers full of diluted oilsands bitumen, or dilbit, would have to navigate the rough waters of the Douglas Channel on their way out into the Pacific.

The Pacific Future proposal — along with others being floated by B.C. newspaper magnate David Black and by aboriginal businessman Calvin Helin — would mean refined products, rather than heavy oil, would be shipped on tankers to Asia, making a potential spill much less environmentally damaging.

"I think everybody knows that it's in Canada's strategic national interest to increase and diversify oil production into Asia," Pacific Future executive chairman Samer Salameh said in an interview.

"But I think everybody in their heart knows that shipping this dilbit is not the answer."

A dilbit spill from a supertanker off the B.C. coast would make the Exxon Valdez disaster look like a "joke," he said.

"We think it's horrible to be shipping bitumen out of B.C. waters. We think that's not the right thing to do by the environment, it's not the right thing to do by First Nations and it's not the right thing to do by the B.C. people. This is a solution to everybody's problem."

TWU. B.C. lawyers vote against anti-gay law school

Lawyers in British Columbia have rejected a Christian university's plans to open a law school — a result that, while not binding, represents a strong rebuke of the school's policies forbidding sex outside heterosexual marriage.

The vote is the latest setback for Trinity Western University, a school with about 4,000 students in B.C.'s Fraser Valley, and is sure to amplify an ongoing debate over the rights of a private institution to impose its religious views about homosexuality on students.

The university, which plans to open a law school in the fall of 2016, requires students to sign a so-called community covenant. The document includes a passage that forbids sex outside of marriage, which is defined as being between a man and a woman. Students can be disciplined for violating the covenant.

The Federation of Law Societies of Canada and the Law Society of B.C.'s benchers have already voted to accept graduates of Trinity Western, which has also been accredited by the province's Advanced Education Ministry.

But more than a thousand B.C. lawyers signed a petition asking that the issue be put to the B.C. society's general membership, which happened at various locations through the province on Tuesday.

Lawyers voted 3,210 to 968 in favour of a motion calling on the society's benchers to reject the school.

The vote doesn't have any immediate effect, but the results will likely put considerable pressure on the law society's benchers to reconsider their earlier decision.

Strike vote. Teachers' union votes 86% in favour of full-scale strike action

British Columbia's teachers' union has voted 86 per cent in favour of moving to a full-scale strike with just weeks left in the school year.

B.C. Teachers' Federation president Jim Iker announced the results late Tuesday night, saying the union will make a decision on escalating job action after further discussions.

The union must now give three days' notice before teachers walk off the job.

Teachers have been without a contract since June 2013, and the vote is the latest development in the dispute that has seen the union and government divided over issues of wages and classroom conditions.

The government has saved $12 million each week in salaries during the teachers' current but limited job action, plus nearly $5 million more by chopping wages.

On Tuesday afternoon, Premier Christy Clark said it wasn't yet impossible to reach a settlement.

"It's well within the realm," she told reporters hours before the vote tally was to be revealed. "If there's a will, there's a way. And there's certainly a will on my part and on the government's part."

Abuse of cattle horrifies owner

Chilliwack. Industry shocked as video footage emerges

The owner of a British Columbia dairy farm where staff were captured on video beating and abusing cattle said he is shocked and saddened by what he saw happening in his own barn.

Jeff Kooyman said Tuesday that undercover video filmed at his Chilliwack Cattle Sales Ltd. is "horrifying to watch."

"That's not us. We have zero tolerance for animal abuse on this farm," Kooyman said in an interview.

Chilliwack Cattle fired eight employees after the group Mercy for Animals Canada took the video to authorities.

The British Columbia SPCA has recommended criminal charges against the former employees. Charges have not yet been laid and the allegations have not been proven in court.

Kooyman said he doesn't know what got into the young men seen kicking, punching and beating the animals with pipes and chains.

"We expected more," Kooyman said after opening his farm to media on Tuesday.

The dairy operation — the country's largest, with more then 3,500 animals — will put in security cameras that will be monitored and they're working with SPCA on better training for staff, he said.

Wally Smith, head of the Dairy Farmers of Canada, said he too was disgusted by what he saw on the videotape.

And Dave Taylor, chairman of the B.C. Dairy Association, called the incident a black mark on the industry.

"Having witnessed the footage, we are deeply shaken," Taylor said. "Organizationally, we will be taking proactive steps to further our already strong animal-care practices."

A year's worth of pot. Website that evaluates medical marijuana producers is holding 'Get Happy' contest

emily.jackson@metronews.ca

This contest has a pretty dope prize.

A Canadian website that evaluates different medical marijuana producers is holding a contest where "one lucky patient" will win a year's worth of free medical marijuana.

Lift — which aims to be a sort of Yelp or Trip Advisor for cannabis — says it is holding the "Get Happy Canada" contest to raise awareness about the new medical marijuana program, introduced April 1, where patients can buy online from licensed producers.

So far, Health Canada has given the stamp of approval to 13 vendors.

"Many Canadians who suffer from debilitating medical conditions are not aware of the benefits of medical marijuana or how to access Health Canada's new medical marijuana program," a Lift spokesperson said in a news release.

Since not all patients can afford medical marijuana, Lift launched the contest to help someone out and raise awareness at the same time.

But the website cannot legally buy marijuana for someone else, as only patients are entitled to buy the product.

To get around that, the contest winner will need to obtain a prescription, place an order for the marijuana from a licensed producer and then Lift will pay the producer for up to one gram a day for 365 days.

To enter the contest, visit liftmj.com/gethappycanada. The contest ends July 18.

The theft happened at a home in the 14,200-block of 56 Avenue in Surrey, sometime between 11 a.m. and 3 p.m., according to Surrey RCMP.

Five of the victim's Second World War service and honour medals were taken, as well as a framed certificate of appreciation for his dedicated service, among other items, police said. THANDI FLETCHER/METRO

Toys 'R' Us. U.S. man gets five years for armed robberies in Vancouver

An American man who robbed a Toys "R" Us and multiple Metro Vancouver grocery stores at gunpoint has been sentenced to five years in a Canadian jail.

Thomas John Schwartz, who went by the assumed name Tom Stone, was charged with robbery and weapons-related offences for the robberies of seven grocery stores in Vancouver, West Vancouver, Burnaby and North Vancouver, as well as a Toys "R" Us store in North Vancouver.

The robberies took place over several months in 2012 between March and December.

On Dec. 15, 2012, U.S. authorities arrested 68-year-old Schwartz, who was living in Squamish, as he was trying to cross the border on an outstanding warrant from 1972 relating to allegations of desertion.

Schwartz was extradited from the U.S. back to Canada after authorities and Canada's Integrated National Security Team determined he had been living in Canada under an assumed name and was being investigated by multiple police agencies north of the border. THANDI FLETCHER/METRO

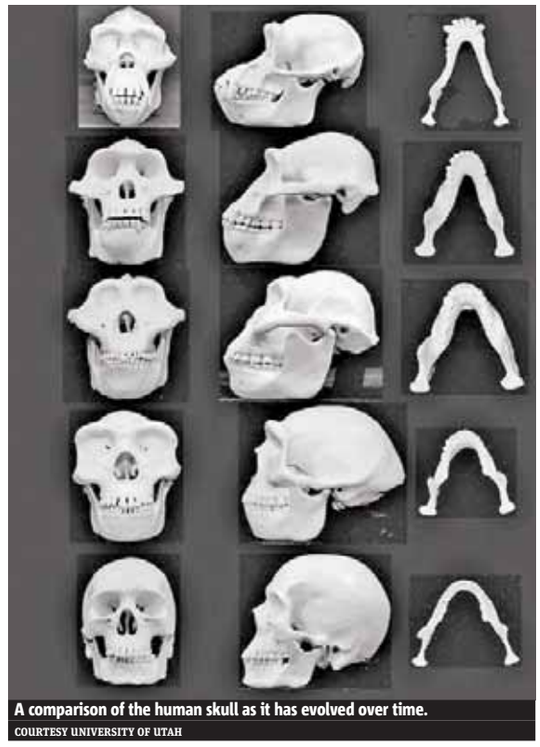
University of Utah biologists contend that human faces evolved to minimize injury from punches to the face during fights between males. Their research is in the June 9 issue of Biological Reviews. JOERN POLLEX/BONGARTS/GETTY IMAGES

Fist fights may have shaped our faces

Minimizing injury.
Man's facial structure may have evolved as our ancestors took beatings, study says



A comparison of the human skull as it has evolved over time. COURTESY UNIVERSITY OF UTAH

Human faces may have been shaped by violent fist fights.

The University of Utah's findings deal a heavy blow to previous research that suggests changes in bone structure were down to the dietary need to crush hard foods such as nuts.

Lead researcher David Carrier explains to Metro why stronger bones were needed to act as a buttress against a new form of boxing.

Many men have had their fair share of booze-fuelled scraps. But what were our ancestors fighting about?

I think it would have been pretty much the same as gorillas and chimpanzees: competition over females, territory and defence of one's family and offspring. So in some ways, it's similar to today.

How do the changes that occurred in hominins and australopiths — the ancestors of homo sapiens — compare to gorillas?

If you compare the face of a chimpanzee or a gorilla to that of an australopith, it's more stout and robust. The mandible, molar teeth, brow ridges, orbit (socket of the skull), cheekbones and the pillars along the edge of the nose, which provide support, are much thicker. In the early australopiths, these parts of the face were absolutely more robust than the same part of the face as male gorillas, which are four times the size.

So why was there a need for such considerable facial reconstruction?

This evolution occurred at the same time that our hands were changing in proportion to allow us to make a fist-like club. The bones which are susceptible to fracturing during a fist fight have increased in both early australopiths and humans. And it's the same bones that show the greatest difference between male and female australopiths and homo lines, including homo sapiens.

So if their hands were like a club, was their fighting technique more a battering motion than a punch?

That's possible, but we don't know. The australopiths were the first to be capable of a forward striking punch or a modern human's punch — the anatomy is there 4-5 million years ago to form a clenched fist. METRO WORLD NEWS

Messi's mystery nausea foxes docs

Shortly after coming on as a second-half sub in Argentina's last World Cup warm-up, Lionel Messi doubled over and appeared to vomit on the pitch. He's done it at least a half-dozen times with Argentina and club team Barcelona, mystifying doctors and fans alike.

"Nerves," says Argentina coach Alejandro Sabella, and that's a diagnosis as good as any. The Argentina captain and four-time world player of the year is under tremendous pressure to lead the Albiceleste to its first World Cup trophy since 1986. The team opens its campaign against Bosnia-Herzegovina on Sunday.

Top athletes throwing up before, during or after a competition is not unusual. Sometimes it's because of the physical stress on their bodies, sometimes because of performance anxiety.

What's unusual about Messi is that it seems to happen quite randomly, not when the pressure would seem the greatest or when he's exhausted himself to the limit.

Barcelona's medical staff hasn't been able to find the cause. Neither have Argentina's team doctors, nor Messi himself. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Advertisers try to score with music

Companies that are advertising for the World Cup are hoping music will strike a chord with fans globally.

Because the FIFA World Cup is the most popular sports event on the planet, advertisers want to take advantage of the large viewing audience. But the World Cup poses problems for companies that are used to making a splash at big sporting events like the Super Bowl with a pricey 30-second spot.

First off, soccer doesn't have very many commercial breaks, with two 45-minutes halves played mostly straight through. Additionally, soccer is a global event, so it's hard to make TV ads that translate across cultures. As a result, brands — both official sponsors and those that just want to capitalize on the event — increasingly are using music to get the world's attention:

Danone's Activia yogurt teamed up with Shakira to update her wildly popular 2010 World Cup Song "Waka Waka," about Africa, with a Brazil-centric video for "La La La." Coca-Cola made a song in English, "The World is Ours," and then created 32 local versions, each sung by a local artist in the native language. And Beats by Dre launched a splashy five-minute video "The Game Before the Game" that shows soccer stars like Neymar Jr. and many others preparing for game time by listening to "Jungle" by Jamie N Commons & The X Ambassadors.

The move is an effort by companies to try to capture the attention of one of the largest global audiences for any event. In the last World Cup four years ago, 3.2 billion people tuned in, according to FIFA. That's compared with the 111.5 million people who tuned into the Super Bowl this year. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Social media tracking World Cup games

This year's World Cup will play out on Twitter, Facebook, Instagram and messaging apps like WhatsApp just as it progresses in stadiums from Sao Paulo to Rio De Janeiro.

Nearly 40 per cent of Facebook's 1.28 billion users are fans of soccer. On Tuesday, the world's biggest online social network announced new features to help fans follow the World Cup — the world's most widely viewed sporting event. Facebook users will be able to keep track of their favourite teams and players throughout the tournament in a special World Cup section, called "Trending World Cup." Available on the web as well as mobile devices, the hub will include the latest scores, game highlights as well as a feed with tournament-related posts from friends, players and teams. The company is also launching a page called FacebookRef, where fans can see commentary about the matches from "The Ref," Facebook's official tournament commentator.

Not to be outdone, Twitter touted in a blog post last week that fans can follow individual teams or players and use the hashtag #WorldCup to tweet about the matches, and follow official accounts such as @FIFAWorldCup and @ussoccer for the United States team, for example.

‘Unbearable sadness’ expressed at funeral for slain RCMP officers

The brother of one of the three New Brunswick Mounties killed in the line of duty told a regimental funeral service Tuesday that the death of Const. Douglas James Larche has left him feeling an overwhelming despair.

Daniel Larche, a master seaman in the Royal Canadian Navy, spoke of the bond he shared with his brother during his eulogy.

“I stand here before you with an unbearable sadness, disbelief, rage, because a great man was taken away from us far too soon,” he told mourners inside the Moncton Coliseum.

“Never in my worst nightmare did I envision a stitch in time that I would be giving his eulogy.”

Police and members of the public filled the hockey arena for the funeral service for Larche, 40, and fellow constables Fabrice Georges Gevaudan, 45, and Dave Joseph Ross, 32.

Ross’s brother-in-law, Adrian Vander Ploeg, recalled how the RCMP officer was making dinner but dropped everything, including leaving the barbecue lid up and the garage door open, to be among the first to respond to a report of a gunman last Wednesday evening.

“For those closest to Dave, that barbecue left still open says everything about who Dave was and his devotion to those around him,” Vander Ploeg said.

Gevaudan was remembered by Geoffrey McLatchie, his spiritual adviser, as a doting husband and stepfather.

“Fabrice lived a heart-centred life, a life of joy and happiness, a life where he connected to the community in which he lived,” McLatchie said.

“He was very comfortable in his own skin and he was his own man.”

RCMP pallbearers carried the flag-draped coffins of the slain officers into the arena.

A beige RCMP Stetson sat atop each casket at the front of the service. Danny, a police dog that served with Ross, was led inside.

Prime Minister Stephen Harper acknowledged a “searing grief” that has enveloped New Brunswick, a province he said he’s proud to call his ancestral home. He said while the justice system will establish what happened, one thing is certain.

“We do not need a verdict to know that what happened here is an outrage,” he said.

RCMP Commissioner Bob Paulson and Gov.-Gen. David Johnston were among the mourners. Opposition Leader Tom Mulcair, Liberal Leader Justin Trudeau and a number of premiers also attended, and six other sites in Moncton and four more outside the city were set up for mourners. A public visitation service held Monday drew hundreds of people.

Assistant Commissioner Roger Brown, the commanding officer of the RCMP in the province, saluted the dead officers as well as constables Eric Dubois and Darlene Goguen, two other Mounties who were wounded in the shootings.

“With the eyes of the nation upon us today, I want to publicly say how incredibly proud I am of each and every one of you,” he told the officers in the crowd while choking back tears. “I only wish I could have told Doug, Dave and Fabrice that in person.”

Searing grief’

“Together, we struggle for answers. We ask what in God’s name happened here and why. We may never know.”

Prime Minister Stephen Harper, who said that while the justice system will establish what took place, one thing is certain: ‘We do not need a verdict to know that what happened here is an outrage.’

Entire police community feels effect of shootings

Before the funeral service began, people inside the arena stood and applauded for 45 minutes as police officers from across Canada and the U.S. arrived to take their places.

In front of a stage were three large portraits of the slain officers in their dress uniforms. There were also three Canadian flags on the left and right sides of the stage.

Before the service, a procession of about 2,700 police officers wound its way through the city with pipers and drummers leading the mourners.

Four RCMP officers on horseback followed the 1.6-kilometre-long procession, leading three hearses carrying the dead officers.

Members of the RCMP and municipal police forces, as well as correctional officers and U.S. border patrol officers, were among those who marched to the Moncton Coliseum, which can hold about 7,000 people. Public transit buses picked up officers in advance of the televised service.

Brenda Jaillet of Oromocto, N.B., said the shooting deaths have touched her husband, a retired RCMP officer.

“It’s a brotherhood,” Jaillet said outside the coliseum before the service. “What has affected these three members has affected him. It could have been him at any time during his career.” THE CANADIAN PRESS

Accused says his mom is actually the killer

Body parts case. Chun Qi Jiang says his mother had been angry with his ex-girlfriend for allegedly stealing jewelry

A Toronto man accused of killing his ex-girlfriend, carving up her body and scattering her remains in different locations has told a court his mother was the one who stabbed the woman to death.

Chun Qi Jiang says his mother had been angry with his on-again-off-again girlfriend Guang Hua Liu because she believed Liu had stolen jewelry from her in the past.

Quoted

"I had both her hands inside my arms and my mouth was pressed on my mother's ear. And I said to her, 'Mother it's all right. I'm your son.'"

Accused murderer Chun Qi Jiang

Jiang says when his mother, who stayed with her son from Friday to Sunday every week, found him having a meal with Liu in his home, the two women got into a confrontation which resulted in Liu grabbing a kitchen knife.

Jiang says he stepped between the two women and was struck in the head with the knife before he was able to get Liu to drop it, at which point both she and her mother left the kitchen. Jiang says he then tried tending to the gash on his head before searching for his mother, whose help he wanted to deal with his wound.

It was at that point that he discovered his mother in a dark room in his basement, leaning over Liu's bloody and lifeless body with a knife in her hand.

"I saw that she has a knife and she was striking Ms. Liu's head,'' Jiang said through a Mandarin interpreter, wiping tears from his eyes. Jiang is charged with first-degree murder in the 41-year-old Liu's death. Her body parts were discovered in Toronto and nearby Mississauga. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Sexual violence. 'Shame is on the aggressor,' Angelina Jolie tells global summit

Angelina Jolie appealed for a change in attitude on sexual violence in conflict Tuesday, bringing the power of her celebrity to an international summit on a topic she said has been taboo for too long.

Opening the four-day London summit, the Hollywood star and United Nations envoy spoke with passion and conviction, recalling her meetings with rape victims who struggle with injustice and stigma long after their countries have emerged from conflict.

"We must send a message around the world that there is no disgrace in being a survivor of sexual violence, that the shame is on the aggressor," she said, to cheers from the audience. "We need to shatter that culture of impunity."

One dead, one injured in yet another U.S. school shooting

Oregon. Police identify gunman but not releasing his name after latest campus rampage

A gunman armed with a rifle shot and killed a student Tuesday and injured a teacher shortly after classes started at a U.S. school and was later found dead as police arrived, authorities in Oregon said.

Authorities have tentatively identified the teen gunman, who was found slumped on a toilet in a bathroom, but weren't ready to release the name, Troutdale Police Chief Scott Anderson said.

Authorities say the shooter likely killed himself.

Anderson said the teacher, Todd Rispler, a 50-year-old physical education instructor, suffered non-life threatening injuries and was treated at the scene.

People comfort each other after a shooting at Reynolds H.S. on Tuesday in Troutdale, Ore. FAITH CATHCART/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Authorities have also identified the student killed, saying that the 14-year-old victim was killed in the boys' locker room.

The attack panicked students, and a lockdown was ordered.

Morgan Rose, 15, said she hid in a locker room with another student and two teachers.

"It was scary in the moment. Now knowing everything's OK I'm better," she said.

The first reports of shots fired came at 8 a.m. on the next-to-last-day of classes. Police initially seemed uncertain about whether there was a live shooter in the school.

Students were led from the school with hands on their heads. Parents and students were reunited in a supermarket parking lot. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Privacy. Concerns raised about new bill

The Conservative government's cyberbullying bill would make too much information about Internet users more easily available to a wide array of authorities, Canada's new privacy czar warns.

Testifying Tuesday at the House of Commons justice committee, Daniel Therrien again urged the government to split the bill in two to allow for thorough examination of several measures that would expand online monitoring.

The legislation would make it illegal to distribute "intimate images" without consent and remove barriers to getting such pictures scrubbed from the Internet — changes Therrien supports, calling them "largely uncontroversial."

Civil libertarians say the cyberbullying bill will erode Internet privacy and make it easier for government to spy on the activities of law-abiding Canadians. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Afghanistan. Officials investigating friendly fire in death of five U.S. troops

Five American special operations troops were killed by a U.S. airstrike called in to help them after they were ambushed by the Taliban in southern Afghanistan, in what appears to be one of the deadliest friendly fire incidents in 14 years of war, officials said Tuesday.

"Investigators are looking into the likelihood that friendly fire was the cause. Our thoughts and prayers are with the families of these fallen," said Pentagon spokesman Rear Adm. John Kirby in a statement.

The deaths occurred during a joint operation of Afghan and NATO forces in the Arghandab district of southern Zabul province ahead of Saturday's presidential runoff election, said provincial police chief Gen. Ghulam Sakhi Rooghlawanay. After the operation was over, the troops came under attack from the Taliban and called in air support, he said.

There was no way to independently confirm Rooghlawanay's comments. The coalition would not comment and NATO headquarters in Brussels also declined to comment.

One of the five American troops killed Monday was identified as 19-year-old Aaron Toppen of Mokena, Ill., who had deployed to Afghanistan in March, according to a family spokeswoman, Jennie Swartz. The Taliban claimed responsibility for Monday's ambush in Zabul. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Casualties

The deaths bring the number of NATO soldiers killed so far this year in Afghanistan to 36, with eight service members killed in June.

- Casualties have been falling in the U.S.-led military coalition as its forces pull back to allow the Afghan army and police to fight the Taliban insurgency. All combat troops are scheduled to be withdrawn by the end of this year.

Sewol ferry disaster. Crew members appear in court amid public hostility

Fifteen crew members from the sunken South Korean ferry appeared in court Tuesday to enter pleas on charges of negligence and failing to save more than 300 dead or missing passengers.

As the crew members stood with bowed heads before three Gwangju District Court judges, families of the victims struggled to contain their fury.

Nearly two months after the sinking, 292 bodies have been recovered and 12 people are still missing. Divers continue underwater searches for those believed trapped inside the sunken ship.

The public hostility against the crew has raised questions about the fairness of the trial. They are being defended by six state-appointed lawyers.

Capt. Lee Joon-seok and three other crew members are charged with homicide, which could carry the death penalty. Prosecutors accuse them of tacitly colluding to abandon the ship while being aware that the passengers would be trapped and killed when the ship sank. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Leak investigation

More potentially explosive containers found

New Mexico Environment Secretary Ryan Flynn says scientists investigating a radiation leak at the federal government's underground nuclear waste dump have identified five other potentially explosive containers in West Texas.

Flynn told a legislative panel on Tuesday that scientists investigating the Feb. 14 leak from the Waste Isolation Pilot Plant have been unable to replicate the chemical event believed to have caused a drum to breach. But he says they have found five other barrels from the same waste stream from Los Alamos National Laboratory and are narrowing their focus on those because of their very high acidic content.

Initially, three of those drums were thought to be at Los Alamos, but Flynn's office says all five are being stored at Waste Control Specialists in Andrews, Texas. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A new, peaceful use for drones sprouts up

UAVs. Unmanned aerial vehicles set to be used by farmers in the U.S.

An unmanned aerial vehicle equipped with a multi-spectral camera awaits takeoff at the Southeastern Agricultural Center's research farm in Moultrie, Ga., in May. JOHNNY CLARK/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Aerial drones, a technology perhaps best known for helping hunt terrorists on the other side of the globe, may soon begin helping U.S. farmers monitor what's happening in their fields.

In Georgia, a group of state and federal officials — along with members of industry and academia — has been working since 2009 to develop a drone that can save a farmer's time and resources during the growing season.

The public got its first glimpse of the group's unmanned aerial vehicle (UAV) at a flight demonstration last month at a research farm in Moultrie, Ga.

By deploying a UAV with a multi-spectral camera to survey crops, farmers could spot water and nutrition issues, insect infestations and fungal infections.

"The UAV saves a tremendous amount of time," said Eric Corban, founder and chief technology officer for Guided Systems Technologies Inc., a Stockbridge, Ga., company that helped develop the software.

WILE E. GOOSTMAN: MACHINE 1, MAN DUMB :(

JUST SAYIN'

Paul Sullivan
metronews.ca

Human evolution lurched ahead the other day, leaving Homo sapiens in the same dust that covers the Neanderthals and other dead branches on the tree of life.

Meet the future: Eugene Goostman. He's a 13-year-old Ukrainian boy. His father is a gynecologist and he owns a gerbil. (Eugene, that is, not his father.)

He's also not a real boy, but a computer program. A chatbot, to be precise.

But this assemblage of hopped-up bits and bytes managed to fool some real humans into believing he was one of us, thereby passing the legendary milestone in the field of artificial intelligence known as the Turing Test, proposed by the British mathematician Alan Turing.

In 1950, Turing predicted that in 50 years a machine would be able to fool at least 30 per cent of interrogators into thinking they were talking to a human being. Well, it took a little bit longer than 50 years (64 to be precise), but Eugene fooled 10 out of 30 judges last week at the University of Reading.

There was an immediate outcry that Eugene was a trick, that his programmers intentionally portrayed him as a child, which would explain his knowledge gaps.

Whatever the flaws in the test or the program, the point is that Eugene managed to fool some of the people in the room. This doesn't surprise me. As computers are getting smarter, I swear people are getting dumber. If you need evidence, just check out these examples from a recent Buzzfeed piece in which real people incisively demonstrate their inferiority:

"Just found out my birthday is the same day as when I was born! Life is crazy!"

Or: "Where's the 2014 Brazil World Cup going to be held?"

Or: "Wow, I can't believe the titanic sunk and the people filming it didn't even stop to help. :("

I could go on, but you get the idea.

Siri-ously

No wonder Eugene Goostman sounds like a real boy. It ain't nothin' special.

Yeah, it's a little creepy getting overtaken by Little Boy Blue. Maybe not as creepy as Her, the recent Spike Jonze movie in which the world's creepiest actor Joaquin Phoenix falls in love with an operating system. Although who can blame him … his operating system has the voice of Scarlett Johansson. Fool me once, twice, whatever.

I haven't fallen in love with my operating system. Yet. But I am fond of her. Siri tells me that right now, it would take me 29 minutes to drive home. That's the word she/it uses. Home. Like we both live there. When Siri first did that, I admit to being touched. Not only did she/it suggest we go home, she gave me precise, accurate directions. It had been a long day. I was tired. I was just glad somebody … or something … knew the way.

"What I love about light painting is that it gives me a level of control and creative freedom which is rare in most forms of photography. Through the adding of different light patterns, or by illuminating it differently, I can completely transform the scene."

Fearsome beast of myth tips scales as misunderstood creature

The Hobbit author J.R.R. Tolkien described dragon Smaug as "a most specially greedy, strong and wicked worm." The Flight of the Conchords have a song called Albi the Racist Dragon, and on Dragon Day at Cornell University, an effigy of one of the giant beasts is burned while students shout and dance.

They can be fiery, fearsome creatures. "Noble dragons don't have friends," writes Terry Pratchett in Guards! Guards! "The nearest they can get to the idea is an enemy who is still alive."

It's not hard to understand why the folks on Game of Thrones are wary of Daenerys Targaryen's (Emilia Clarke) brood of the beasts when she spouts off lines like, "When my dragons are grown, we will take back what was stolen from me and destroy those who wronged me! We will lay waste to armies and burn cities to the ground!" Then there's Bryagh, the serpentine villain of The Flight of Dragons who not only insults the movie's heroes before dispatching them, he also gobbles up the eggs of other dragons!

Maybe if characters in movies paid more heed to the advice given by author Steven Brust — "Always speak politely to an enraged dragon" — then movies and TV wouldn't have to offer up such a wide array of ways to rid the world of dragons. Look on IMDb, there are dozens of titles containing the phrase "dragon slayer."

The 2010 animated hit How to Train Your Dragon begins in a remote Viking village where killing a dragon is "everything." It focuses on Hiccup (Jay Baruchel), a kind-hearted boy who captures one of the flying behemoths and discovers two things: One, he can't bring himself to kill it, and two, that dragons aren't the fearful monsters everyone thinks they are. He becomes a Dragon Whisperer and the movie shows the serpentine creatures in a different light than the abysmal brutes usually seen on screen.

This weekend, How to Train Your Dragon 2 adds to the list of cinematic dragons who are more misunderstood than actually evil.

The 1941 Disney flick The Reluctant Dragon features a dragon that would rather recite poetry than cause havoc. "You've got to be mad to breathe fire," he says, "but I'm not mad at anybody."

In the live-action DragonHeart, a fire-breather must team with a dragon-slaying knight (Dennis Quaid) to end an evil king's rule. When the giant serpent is accused of eating an adversary, he is indignant. "I merely chewed in self-defense, but I never swallowed."

Eddie Murphy lent some comedic relief to the 1998 animated movie Mulan as the tiny, blue-horned Mushu. He may be the size of the Geico gecko, but don't mention it. "I'm a dragon, not lizard. I don't do that tongue thing."

Baruchel and his best Bud

Toothless hero for young fans

Jay Baruchel has a unique voice. Instantly recognizable, the nasally twang he uses to bring the character of How to Train Your Dragon 2's Hiccup to life is so distinctive it even has its own Facebook fan page.

You would think that kids — who made the Viking teenager and his dragon Toothless so popular on the big screen (the original 2010 movie grossed almost half a billion dollars) and on the TV show and video games — would be thrilled to meet the man behind the voice. Right?

"Friends who have kids will say, 'Hey! Look! It's Hiccup,'" and then it is utter, sheer disappointment," he says. "'This is not Hiccup. It's a real-life human dirtbag I'm looking at.' Although I have to say I was in a liquor store in Los Angeles a few months ago, and I was saying something to the cashier and this guy turned around and said, 'You're funny. You know you're doing something right when you get recognized by your voice,' but usually with the kids, they're super bummed to actually meet me."

Baruchel has voiced Hiccup in two films (with at least one more on the way) and 40 episodes of the television show.

Director Dean DeBlois says that the actor and the character are now interchangeable, with Baruchel bringing character ideas to the table every time out.

"How much input I ultimately have is purely up to (Dean)," says Baruchel. RICHARD CROUSE

Franco's fanfic plucks LiLo-est hanging fruit

MELINDA TAUB
Metro World News

James Franco and Lindsay Lohan deserve each other, I think. Both of them seem addicted to the spotlight, and neither has any qualms about involving other people in their nonsense. Case in point: James Franco wrote a "short story" about Lohan for Vice's fiction issue.

It's not just about Lohan — Franco fills the piece with anecdotes about his life in Hollywood, circa 2011. By calling it fiction, I'm sure he intends us to ask ourselves what's real and what's made up, which, to be fair, I totally am. The bulk of the piece is about Lindsay Lohan — I'm sorry, "Lindsay Lohan" — letting herself into "James Franco" the narrator's Chateau Marmont bungalow to hit on him. He reads her stories instead of sleeping with her, until she falls asleep. That much Franco has relayed in interviews as fact. But what about the details we haven't heard about before?

I don't really approve of kissing and telling, but I have to admit that I'd get through a lot more New Yorker fiction if it was all like James Franco's Lohan fanfic.

It's-never-too-late Kate finally calls out former beaus for being dopes

After dating both Lance Armstrong and Yankees star Alex Rodriguez, it's surprising Kate Hudson hasn't weighed in on the sports doping issue sooner. But better late than never. In an interview with InStyle magazine, Hudson says she was "as shocked as anyone" when Armstrong confessed to using performance-enhancing drugs. "I personally think that you make the choices you make and you should reap the consequences," she says. "Lance and Alex are phenomenal athletes who have made some bad choices and let a lot of people down. It's a decision they made for themselves, and they've got to loathe it."

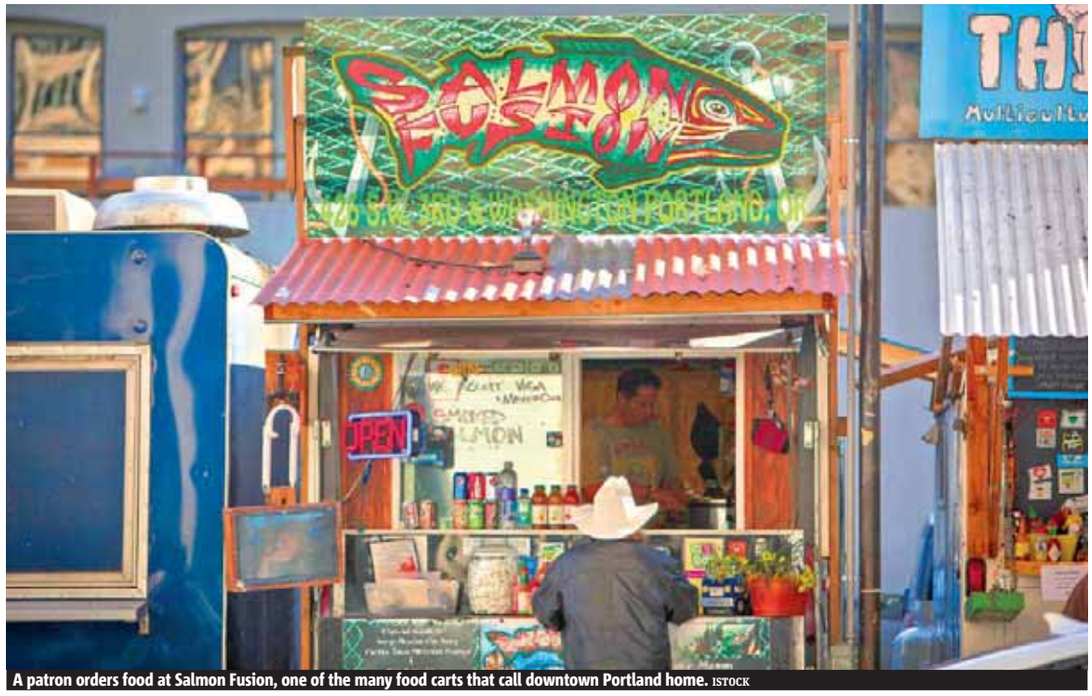
Portland hits the spot with its weird and wonderful food carts

Would you like tarragon anchovy mayo on that? The city's most famous food stalls combine comfort with courage

STEVE GOW
life@metronews.ca



A patron orders food at Salmon Fusion, one of the many food carts that call downtown Portland home. ISTOCK

With over 500 eateries dotting the cityscape, Portland's food carts have become a thing of legend. Unlike most cities' roving food trucks however, most of Portland's kitchens are stationed in so-called pods and serve up more than just uninspired frankfurters. In Portland, foodies can feast on everything from hummus to Himalayan fare. Here is a list of just five of the most far-out food trucks to tempt you on your next trip to Oregon.

Potato Champion

Since 2008, this food cart has been serving up twice-fried Belgian-style pommes frites with a variety of sauces that include Rosemary Truffle Ketchup and Tarragon Anchovy Mayo. But if you're interested in tasting their big signature dish, you'll need to order the PB and J — fries topped with peanut satay and raspberry chipotle sauce. As one can imagine, Potato Champion is especially popular with late-night crowds. Visit potatochampion.com.

808 Grinds

Aloha, foodies! Named "favourite food cart" in an Oregonian reader's poll, this award-winning eatery offers up an array of authentic Hawaiian cuisine, including kalua pig (a kind of pulled pork). For the experimental, you can also taste Spam Musubi (seared marinated spam over rice wrapped in seaweed) with their Garlic Furikake Fries. See 808grinds.com.

Solar Waffle Works

A very unique food cart, Solar Waffle Works is an all-volunteer, non-profit business that relies almost entirely on solar energy to cook all sorts of sweet and savoury waffles from as low as $2.50. Toss in the fact that they manage a training program for at-risk youth in the community and Solar Waffle definitely works. Check out www.pps.k12.or.us/schools/solar-waffle.

Chez Dodo

Mauritius is a long way from Oregon, yet you can get the taste of the tiny Indian Ocean island right in the middle of Portland. The island itself is a mix of different cultures (Portuguese, Indian, African) but is most famous as the home of the famed, extinct Dodo bird. At Chez Dodo, you begin with a base of flat bread or noodles, add a sauce, and top with bean, potatoes, meat and, if you're daring, the Island Fever spicy curry sauce. See facebook.com/chezdodo.

PBJ's Grilled

Founded by Las Vegas expatriates, PBJ's serves all manner of popular grilled peanut butter and jam sandwiches — which can include applewood smoked bacon, hamburger, crispy coconut shrimp and more. Who could have guessed jalapeno peppers would go so well with peanut butter? Visit pbjsgrilled.com.

Plan a food quest

For the most comprehensive list of Portland's exterior eateries, Food Carts Portland boasts a constantly updated list of carts, maps, cuisine categories and menus. In fact, they even offer tours. Visit foodcartsportland.com.

Ooh la la! Top of the Eiffel Tower

So romantic, so ubiquitous, so over-exposed — but still so incredibly neat. The Eiffel Tower is all those things, and you really need to make a pilgrimage to the top of the 1,710 steps in your lifetime. Built in 1889 (recently celebrating its 125th birthday), it was the tallest building in the world at the time: 1,062 feet. The 10,000 tonnes of iron latticework is painted every seven years to ward off the rust and to make sure it looks postcard-perfect for the seven million people that visit each year. Make a day out of your visit to the Champ de Mars; bring a picnic or a Frisbee.

Amazing Race ups the drama

Off to the races.
Canada host Jon Montgomery promises an intense season full of villains and heroes

ON THE MOVE
Loren Christie
life@metronews.ca

My favourite reality travel competition, The Amazing Race: Canada, is coming back for a second season. I tried to get some details out of returning host, Jon Montgomery.

Why should people tune in?
This year the race is harder, the drama is going to be more intense and the teams are going to be awesome, from villains to heroes and back. You will love the same people that moments later you might hate. It's the most real reality TV show out there.

What makes it different from last year?
There are more teams and therefore the race and the number of episodes are longer. This year's racers are more competitive in terms of their physicality and their nature. These people are gamers — students and fans of the show. Alliances were formed, and when teams interact, whether trying to work together or against each other, that always adds drama to the situation.

Can you tell me where the race started this year?
In Canada.

Helpful. Are we going to see provinces that were missed last year ... Manitoba, New Brunswick?
You can't please everybody all the time. We do our best.

Did racers need to bring their passports this year?
They did need to bring their passports, if they didn't have a valid driver's licence. You need ID of some sort.

Jon Montgomery returns to CTV July 8 for the second season of The Amazing Race. CTV

Very cryptic. Were there places you visited that you'll go back to?
Of course! The landscapes were mesmerizing. People will be blown away by the vistas that make up our backdrop to the shenanigans that unfold. We could do another 10 seasons here in Canada and never have the same backdrop twice.

You are unique in that you actually do the detours and roadblocks.
You betcha. From my standpoint, that's the best part. I get to try all of the things. If I didn't do them, it was simply an issue of time constraint. The food-based challenges can be disgusting stuff, but I have to do it. When am I going to get another chance to try? I think that's why people tune in. They can see themselves on the show. They don't need to be gifted in any special way, they just have to have a desire to explore and challenge themselves. And the capacity to travel inter-provincially.

And maybe ... internationally?
Maybe … stay tuned.

New

Introducing the Dreamliner

Air Canada recently launched its new Boeing 787, which will replace the 767 model, boasting 20 per cent better mileage. The Dreamliner is also quieter, with lower cabin pressure, higher humidity levels and an advanced air-treatment system. Windows are 30 per cent bigger than other similar planes, and let's not forget about the giant overhead bins. About 40 of these will be added to the fleet within the next five years, starting with Toronto-Tokyo next month. Visit 787.aircanada.com for a virtual tour.

A crunch that goes from appetizer to easy dinner

Crunchy Vegetable and Lentil Salad. This dish, which is finished with a tasty pesto, is the perfect option for outdoor dining

DINNER EXPRESS
Emily Richards
food@metronews.ca

I love making salads to serve up for dinner. They look amazing and are easy to prepare ahead.

This Vegetable and Lentil Salad is a great one to pack along for a dinner picnic in the park. Bring along a baguette and some cheese with a bottle of your favourite wine to enjoy a quiet dinner outdoors.

The lentils in this salad provide a meatless protein option and the perfect texture to enjoy along with the crunchy vegetables. Grown in Canada, lentils have become a popular addition to many kitchens. Not only canned varieties, which are pantry staples, but also dried lentils can be cooked up quickly with lots of flavour and textures.

If you have leftover grilled chicken or a can of tuna or salmon, feel free to add it in for a heartier salad.

Serve the Vegetable and Lentil Salad on a bed of greens for a twist or in small portions for a new appetizer idea.

FLASH FOOD

From your fridge to your table in 30 minutes or less

Cooking tips

- White balsamic vinegar offers a slightly sweet flavour to this salad; for more tang, use a cider or white wine vinegar.

1. In pot, combine the dry green or brown lentils, water and bay leaves; bring to a boil. Reduce heat and simmer gently for 15 to 20 minutes or until tender. Drain and rinse with cold water; drain well and place in large bowl. Stir in celery, carrot, pepper and mint.

2. Pesto Dressing: In a small bowl, whisk together broth, vinegar, pesto, oil and pepper. Stir in feta cheese. Pour over top of salad and toss to coat.

Ingredients

- 1/2 cup (125 ml) dry green or brown lentils
- 2 cups (500 ml) water
- 2 bay leaves
- 1 large rib celery, diced
- 1 large carrot, shredded
- 1 red pepper, chopped
- 2 tbsp (30 ml) chopped fresh mint

Pesto Dressing

- 2 tbsp (30 ml) vegetable broth
- 2 tbsp (30 ml) white balsamic vinegar
- 1 tbsp (15 ml) basil or sundried tomato pesto
- 2 tsp (10 ml) canola oil
- 1/4 tsp (1 ml) black pepper
- 1/4 cup (60 ml) finely crumbled light feta cheese

Convocation. Keep these key points in mind while putting on your cap and gown

ELIAS DA SILVA-POWELL
TalentEgg.ca

Dress cool, dress smart. The robes are hot, and you'll probably put them on at least an hour before you cross the stage. When you find yourself standing in an airless stairwell shoulder-to-shoulder with 140 other people, you'll regret wearing more layers than were strictly necessary. FLICKR: LOYOLAUNIVERSITYCHICAGO

If you're soon to attend your convocation, then the last time you were handed a scroll on stage was probably at the end of high school, which may seem like a lifetime ago.

Though you've seen dozens of graduation ceremonies in TV shows and movies, it's easy to get caught off-guard by the reality of convocation.

As a double grad with a host of multiple-degree-holding friends, I've heard a lot about graduation and its various pitfalls.

Don't get me wrong, it's still a great day and an occasion to celebrate. But a little preparation can make a lot of difference. Here are key things you should keep in mind:

Put your best foot forward
The only thing more risky than overdressing for your convocation is a bad footwear choice. Brand new shoes look great, but not when every step means the discovery of a new blister. Similarly, a height boost will only give you a confidence boost until you topple over.

Tip: Unless you're planning to ride a skateboard across the stage, leave your sneakers and running shoes at home. If you buy new shoes, break them in first. Heels should be no higher in inches than the number of years it took to complete your degree.

If it's on, turn it off
If your cellphone is on, turn it off. If it's on silent, turn it off. If you're "pretty sure" it's off, turn it off.

Tip: This isn't funny. Even if the speeches are dull, your EDM ringtone isn't going to solve anything.

Get ready to see everyone
The periods before and after the convocation ceremony can feel like the most uncomfortable cocktail party in the world.

The neighbour who broke your heart? Right there. The person you offended in a class debate? Hi. The former friend you no longer speak to? Strained silence.

You'll cross paths with an endless array of these people. You'll even be able to hear their less-than-enthusiastic clapping from the stage, no matter how big the crowd.

Tip: Nod, smile, shake hands — and keep moving. Find (and stay with) your close friends. Consider having a less-problematic personal life the next time around.

Brace for speeches
As someone who has both given and listened to some terrible speeches, I recognize that fine speech-making is much like fine watch-making — a delicate, precise balance of minute parts, all working towards a simple yet elegant goal.

High shoes, you lose

Heels should be no higher in inches than the number of years it took to complete your degree.

The speeches at your ceremony may be rise-to-your-feet-and-cheer good or Oh-wow-I'm-watching-sunbeams-cross-the-walls bad, but in either case, you should be prepared for awkward jokes, personal anecdotes that go nowhere and discouraging school-of-hard-knocks type observations.

Tip: Giving a speech at your ceremony? Don't use the phrase, "It's tough out there." Everyone is tired of hearing that.

Significant moments can also be incredibly uncomfortable
When you boil it down, the whole "big day" is a backdrop to your moment: the moment when you cross the stage, seize your scroll and stomp gloriously down the stairs, accompanied by roars and cheers. That's a TV/movie thing, though.

For the average student, there's only enough crowd-enthusiasm to carry you partway across the stage. If your ceremony involves multiple steps (get the degree, get a handshake, walk to centre stage, get another handshake, etc.) you may find your big moment has a backdrop of quiet coughing and the rustling noise of hundreds of people sweating quietly.

Tip: At many ceremonies, the audience is specifically asked not to applaud, in an effort to keep the event on-pace. Prime your family and friends to disregard this directive — everyone else will.

Minutes to win it

Sell it with speed.
Create the perfect elevator pitch with these four tips from Shark Tank survivor Kaeya Majmundar

LAKSHMI GANDHI
Metro World News

Ask any entrepreneur and they'll say that one of the biggest keys to success is the ability to sell your product to a potential customer or investor in three minutes or less. A good "elevator pitch" is essential.

Kaeya Majmundar knows all about the importance of a good pitch. Majmundar first came up with the idea for the BZBox, a collapsible box that does not require any assembly, when she was helping a friend pack and a box suddenly fell apart.

While building her product, she also became something of an elevator pitch expert, entering and winning a 2012 pitch competition mounted by the Collegiate Entrepreneurs' Organization.

Majmundar put those skills to good use recently when she was selected to appear on the season finale of ABC's hit show Shark Tank, where she successfully convinced investor Lori Grenier to back the BZBox.

Majmundar, a senior at Emory University, shares these pointers on how to create a great pitch.

Draw your audience in
"You have to hook them," says Majmundar of potential investors. "I'd say the most important thing is to not get bogged down with the technical details. They'll ask the right questions if they are enticed."

Create a storyline
It's important to think of yourself as a storyteller, she says. A good story may convince people to overlook some shortcomings. Also, let your passion shine through. "I didn't have the business savvy when I got started," says Majmundar. "But people saw my enthusiasm and believed in me."

A passion for packin'

"I didn't have the business savvy when I got started. But people saw my enthusiasm and believed in me."
Kaeya Majmundar
Creator of the BZBox

Remember, all feedback is good feedback
Even people who react negatively to your idea can still teach you something. "I tend to focus more on the negative feedback than the praise because it motivates me," says Majmundar. An iffy reception from a potential investor can lead you to come up with necessary tweaks to the product.

Be persistent
"The biggest thing that I've learned is to stick with it," says Majmundar. "I can't even say the number of times people have turned me down. But there's really no dead end. You can either take a left or a right."

Former Team Canada head coach Willie Desjardins watches during practice at the World Junior Hockey Championship in Saskatoon on Dec. 27, 2009. Desjardins is looking like a strong fit for the Vancouver Canucks' coaching job. NATHAN DENETTE/THE CANADIAN PRESS

AHL coach could hold key to Canucks' future

Willie Desjardins.
Vancouver candidate can bring together vets and youngsters

Jim Nill won't be surprised if his phone starts ringing after the Calder Cup final.

The Dallas Stars general manager has heard all the talk about his minor league coach Willie Desjardins, who has led the Texas Stars to the AHL championship, being a hot candidate for an NHL job. Nill says he'll even help make it happen.

"No teams have called yet, but that's out of respect for our team still being in the playoffs in Texas," Nill said in a recent phone interview. "He's definitely an up-and-coming NHL coach and he deserves the opportunity. That's a compliment to him and it's a compliment to our organization, so we would not hold him back."

For his part, Desjardins said he's not worried about an NHL job right now. His focus is on the Calder Cup, but the 57-year-old Climax, Sask., native is considered a top candidate for the Vancouver Canucks as a replacement for the fired John Tortorella.

Finding the foundation

"If you don't have the leaders that want to win, it's difficult to win."
Texas Stars coach Willie Desjardins

Desjardins isn't the polar opposite of the fiery Tortorella. Nill and Shaun Clouston, Desjardins' assistant with the Medicine Hat Tigers and now their head coach, use the word "intense" to describe him.

But what Clouston recalls about Desjardins, who won two WHL championships in Medicine Hat, is the amount of time and energy he put into one-on-one chats with players on bus rides from city to city.

But the Canucks aren't considering Desjardins for his communication skills alone. What he has shown in Texas is an ability to quickly mould a team into a contender while mixing and matching veterans and young players.

"I think you develop by playing to win," Desjardins said in a phone interview. "You never just play to play, you play to win, and I think when young players realize that, their only choice is to learn to play that way as well."

Just one Canuck on Canadians' roster

The Vancouver Canadians, with three consecutive Northwest League championships and in search of a fourth, begin their 2014 season Friday on the road against Salem-Keizer.

The Canadians, the short-season Single A affiliate of the Toronto Blue Jays, announced their opening-day roster on Tuesday, with right-handed pitcher Andrew Case of New Brunswick as the lone Canuck on the team for right now.

Case signed with the Blue Jays last fall, following the Tournament 12, in which he threw a no-hitter in the semifinal, according to the Jays' website.

Brenden Kalfus, who hit .268 with one home run and 19 runs batted in, returns to Vancouver's outfield after a solid first season with the Canadians.

The Canadians are on the road for their first five games, before returning to the friendly and scenic Nat Bailey Stadium for a three-game homestand against Spokane, beginning June 18. The Canadians announced last week the home opener next Wednesday is sold out. METRO

Jackson names Fisher head coach

The New York Knicks hired Derek Fisher as their new coach on Tuesday, with Phil Jackson turning to one of his most trustworthy former players.

Just days after finishing his 18th season, Fisher was tabbed to replace Mike Woodson, whom Jackson fired after the season in his first major move as team president.

Kick off the World Cup with Metro

It's almost here.

The 2014 FIFA World Cup begins Thursday, with the host nation Brazil taking on Croatia in the opener. And then it's nothing but a full month of the best soccer on a global scale for fans to enjoy.

There may not be anything else like it in the sporting world.

Excitement about this event has been growing, and we at Metro Vancouver can attest. You'll notice online throughout this entire tournament that we will have special features to help you enjoy your World Cup experience.

Beginning tomorrow afternoon, readers visiting metronews.ca will be able to find an interactive map of locations around the Lower Mainland to watch the action.

If there's a place we missed, feel free to tweet or e-mail us with your favourite locations.

Metro will also have the World Cup picks of three players from the Vancouver Whitecaps organization, including the electrifying speedster Kekuta Manneh, the club's fourth overall pick in the 2013 MLS SuperDraft, back-up goalie Paolo Tornaghi of Italy, centre back and captain Jay DeMerit and forward Omar Salgado — both from the U.S. We'll be posting those online for all to check out.

Also, four members of Metro's editorial department have filled out their brackets, posted online.

The days leading up to this tournament seemed to have flown by. The anticipation of what's to come has been growing.

Just like you, our eyes will be glued to the television as we watch the best soccer players and nations compete for World Cup supremacy.

MLB. Machado appeals his 5-game suspension

Orioles third baseman Manny Machado has been suspended for five games and fined for intentionally throwing his bat on the field during Sunday's game against Oakland.

He has appealed the suspension, which was slated to start immediately. Machado was in the starting lineup Tuesday against Boston.

Machado let his bat fly toward third base after swinging at a pitch from Fernando Abad in the eighth inning. The bat-toss came during a plate appearance in which Abad threw successive high-and-tight pitches.

Kawhi finds his game in MIA as Spurs spank Heat

NBA Finals. Young forward makes first six shots in first-half flurry to give team series lead

Kawhi Leonard and the San Antonio Spurs shot their way into history — and back into the lead in the NBA Finals.

Leonard scored a career-high 29 points, and the Spurs made a finals-record 75.8 per cent of their shots in the first half in a 111-92 victory over the Miami Heat on Tuesday night that gave them a 2-1 series lead.

The Spurs made 19 of their first 21 shots and finished 25 of 33 in the first half, bettering the 75 per cent shooting by Orlando against the Lakers in the 2009 finals.

They led by as much as 25 and were only briefly challenged in their second lopsided victory in the series.

Game 3

Spurs	Heat
111	92

Unlike Game 1, when they didn't pull away until the final minutes, the Spurs were way ahead before halftime in this one.

Leonard scored only 18 points in the first two games, looking frustrated while getting into foul trouble trying to defend LeBron James in Game 2. But he had his outside shot working early, and the effect on the Spurs offence was obvious.

James and Dwyane Wade had 22 points each for the Heat, who host Game 4 on Thursday.

DRIVE 5

2014 BMW i3

- Type. Four-door, four-passenger, rear-wheel drive hatchback
- Engines (hp). Electric motor with lithium-ion battery; optional 650cc range-extending gasoline engine
- Base price (incl. destination). $44,950

Market position

The i3 should resonate with those who want an emissions-free, city-sized car, but prefer a premium brand. Those with SUVs may find it a viable second car for errands and commutes, too.

Points

- The cabin contains environmentally friendly materials such as bamboo, naturally tanned leather, and a dash made from plants.
- The navigation system can show the car's range, including how traffic, hills or temperature will affect it, as well as nearby public charging stations.
- The i3's manufacturing process uses 50 per cent less energy, and 70 per cent less water, than that of a conventional car.

The i3 has a range of about 160 kilometres on a charge.

Safety

Front, side, curtain, and knee airbags; dynamic stability control; tire pressure warning; battery safety terminal; anti-whiplash head restraints; emergency calling system.

This zippy car's no compromise

Review. The 2014 BMW i3 may be electric, but with the ability to reach up to 150 km/h, it's far from a golf cart

Mention BMW, and most people think of sports cars or luxury cruisers. But the company's newest model is something completely different: a funky little electric city car with the potential to change the way many people get from A to B.

It's called the i3, with the "i" standing for innovation. Small on the outside, but extremely roomy on the inside, it was designed from the ground up to be an electric car, rather than a conversion from a gasoline model. It's on sale now, but will only be available from specific dealers in Toronto, Montreal, and Vancouver initially.

Its unusual design consists of two modules: an aluminum frame that contains both the electric motor and lithium-ion battery, and a passenger compartment formed from carbon fibre. These are costly materials, but their light weight allows BMW to use a smaller, less-expensive battery to power the car.

The i3 has a range of approximately 160 kilometres on a charge, which takes about three hours on 240-volt current. BMW says that most Canadians only drive an average of 47 km per day, but for those who fear being stranded, an optional two-cylinder gasoline engine can be added. When the battery runs down, the gas engine acts solely as a generator to make more electricity.

Driving the i3 is a blast. This is no golf cart: Acceleration is snappy, and it's capable of reaching 150 km/h. It captures energy when decelerating, feeding it back into the battery as electricity. This regenerative braking slows the car quickly, and once you get the hang of it, you'll hardly touch the brakes in city traffic.

The steering is well-weighted, with fairly sporty handling. Even though it's a featherweight, it feels substantial, and the comfortable seats have a premium feel. You're treading lightly on the environment, but it never feels like a compromise. Electric vehicles are still a small sliver of the market, and probably will be for a while, but models like the i3 are a considerable step closer to making batteries the fuel of the future.

Shift: Saving the planet with electric cars, traffic-light-readers and fuel made from plant and animal oils

The little EV tender that could

In the days before diesel electric engines, steam trains carried tenders behind them filled with wood or coal to extend their range. Now the idea has reached electric cars. The EP Tender is essentially a gasoline engine inside a small trailer that can provide extra electricity for electric cars on long journeys. Its inventor, Frenchman Jean-Baptiste Segard, coupled the EP Tender with a Renault Zoe, a pure electric that has become a popular EV in Europe. The idea isn't entirely new, since cars such as the Chevrolet Volt carry a range-extending gasoline generation. The notion of being able to add it later might take some of the angst out of the decision whether to go with an electric car in the first place.

Traffic-light-reader system saves fuel, frustration

Can there be any doubt that automobiles are becoming more self-aware with each new generation? Audi's newly developed traffic-light recognition system could save fuel as well as the annoyance that comes from being stuck behind oblivious drivers who don't notice when lights switch colour, by allowing you to anticipate changing signals. The system works by reading the automated signals from a city's central traffic computer, reports auto news website MotorAuthority, and transmitting that information to the driver through the car's driver information display. At a red light, the system can count down the time remaining until a change to green, and prime an engine stop-start system to restart the engine five second before that.

Shift points

- A study from auto data and industry trend tracker Experian Automotive suggests that electric-car shoppers are younger and wealthier than hybrid shoppers. Experian reached that conclusion after analyzing data from electric and hybrid car purchases during 2013.
- While biodiesel fuel made from plant or animal oils has been around for a while, gasoline from such sources hasn't. But that might be about to change. A team at the University of California — Davis has filed a patent on a new inexpensive technology that offers waste-to-gas yields of more than 60 per cent.

Horoscopes

♈ Aries
March 21 - April 20
If you have a crush on someone, let them know. There is no guarantee that they will return your feelings but even if they do not, they will be flattered by your interest and you'll know where you stand.

♉ Taurus
April 21 - May 21
You seem to have retreated into your shell and in doing so have lost contact with a number of people. Make it a priority today to look them up and let them know you still exist — and care.

♊ Gemini
May 22 - June 21
You could make an issue of something that annoys you but is it worth the effort? There are so many things going right that you can afford to let minor annoyances pass you by.

♋ Cancer
June 22 - July 23
Something that once seemed beyond you is within reach and you can easily make it your own over the next 24 hours. Once you've got it, don't hold it too tightly. Too much possessiveness is rarely a good thing.

♌ Leo
July 24 - Aug. 23
Much as you'd like to help a loved one today if they signal that they want you to keep your distance, respect that. You'll make matters worse if you interfere where you're not invited.

♍ Virgo
Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
Someone you have not seen for a while will come back into your life over the next 24 hours. You may still be a bit sore that they walked out on you without reason but let it pass. You were made to be together.

♎ Libra
Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
Don't pay much attention to material things today. What matters is not how much you earn but how happy you are on the inside. Bank accounts are one thing — spiritual accounts quite another.

♏ Scorpio
Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
You may want to tear everything down and start again from scratch but is that necessary? You may regret it in the long-term if you destroy what you have created.

♐ Sagittarius
Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
Even a Sagittarius gets it wrong now and again so don't take it to heart if you have made some kind of mistake. And don't try to cover it up either. You are always bold in your successes, so be bold in your failures too.

♑ Capricorn
Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
If you live in dread of things that might never happen you will almost certainly miss out on something that would have made life a lot more exciting and a lot more rewarding.

♒ Aquarius
Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
Push yourself forward today and let people in positions of power know who you are and what you can do. Most likely they know already but it won't hurt to remind them. Be keen.

♓ Pisces
Feb. 20 - March 20
Some may complain that you're making life difficult. And you can be certain that you're doing the right thing. It's not about making things difficult for them but making things easier for you. SALLY BROMPTON
